References Category:Mobile phone accessories[Toxoplasmosis, a rare cause of the left congenital cataract]. Toxoplasmosis is a rare cause of congenital cataract. Congenital toxoplasmosis is a much rarer disease than acquired toxoplasmosis and usually does not lead to early visual damage. Only a few case reports on congenital toxoplasmosis of the lens exist in the literature. The authors report a case of congenital toxoplasmosis diagnosed after a congenital cataract with significant ocular motility limitation in the 2-month-old child. No evidence of systemic infection was detected. The patient underwent topical and systemic treatment with sulphonamides and spiramycin for a duration of 12 weeks and finally was transferred to rehabilitation for severe developmental delay.
